Soup Kitchens

Soup kitchens provide free meals to anyone who comes in during meal hours. Menus vary, although each soup kitchen tries to offer balanced meals.

Food Pantries

Pantries provide food to the general public on an ongoing basis. Pantries may limit the number of times they serve the same recipient in a given time period. All pantries strive to provide balanced food bags that include all food groups. Typically, the food is nonperishable, i.e. canned goods & dried beans, pasta & rice. Some pantries provide three day supplies of food for people in crisis situations put together according to a suggested menu & based on family size. Other pantries focus on perishable foods such as produce, dairy & bread & include a limited number of nonperishable items.

Most agencies require some form of identification from recipients & each person in their household. Food Pantries may require recipients to call ahead for an appointment. A small number of pantries ask people to get a referral from another agency. Please share the information about pantry requirements included with the pantry description with the people you are helping.
